

Securities regulations generally require that securities be distributed under a prospectus (which must be vetted by a securities regulatory authority and provides investors with certain legal protections) unless a specific exemption applies. Securities sold under a prospectus exemption are referred to as “private placements” or “exempt market securities”. In very general terms, purchases of a private placement are restricted to persons who are deemed to not need the protections provided by a prospectus because: 1) the investor is sufficiently sophisticated to conduct their own assessment of the merits of an investment, and; 2) the investor has sufficient income and assets to withstand the risk of a substantial or total loss on the investment.

Qualifying purchasers are referred to as “accredited investors”. (Note Quebec regulations do not permit private placement purchases by accredited investors who are residents of that province unless the issuer has obtained a specific exemption order.) PLEASE NOTE THAT THE ISSUER OF THE SECURITY MAY REQUIRE ADDITIONAL DOCUMENTATION TO BE COMPLETED.
